

Edward Farmer

Edward is a career equity capital markets investment banker who specialised in UK privatisations in the Margaret Thatcher era at Lazard Brothers and Cazenove & Co.

He moved to Panmure Gordon where he continued to work on international transactions such as the liquidation of the London listed Cambodian/Vietnamese REIT, JSM Indochina, and the first ever listing of a New Zealand Company, Endace, on the London Stock Exchange.

He experienced the Thai banking crisis and its impacts on Asian capital markets in the late 1990s, and personally co-owns a fully UK regulated investment firm which has successfully launched and closed early stage equity financings for primarily companies in the tech sector such as Collision Management Systems (<https://collisionmanagementsystems.co.uk>) and ReAlyse (<https://www.realyse.com/>)

As well as assisting the Cobden Partners team's Bulgarian business Edward has twice taught at the Sofia Business School, 2017 and 2019, focussing on privatisation models and global risks in general.

Edward is an accomplished sportsman having played cricket for Eton College at Lord's and represented the United Kingdom at the 1984 Los Angeles Olympic Games where he was the Assistant Chef d'equipe of the Three Day Event Equestrian Team.
