

James Booth

James Booth is a senior broadcast journalist with a major UK broadcaster.

After graduating from Durham University, he started a PhD at Cambridge University in biochemistry only to leave it after a year to take a job in television.

For the last 17 years he has been working on a broad range of agenda setting stories winning a number of Royal Television Society awards for his journalism.

In the last few years he has developed an unhealthy interest in all matters economic, particularly the banking and debt crisis.
